Alamy adds World History Archive to its collection

30 Jan 2007

Alamy has extended its range of archival material by adding the World History Archive to its repertoire of historical collections.

Established in 1960, World History Archive represents a unique and extraordinary collection of pictures.

Spanning centuries, it provides an intriguing insight into the past, documenting all periods from the Medieval, Victorian and Elizabethan to more contemporary times.

With a diversity of visual styles from striking woodcuts to lithographs and photographs, the collection also focuses on science, medicine, famous people, war and art subjects. The current number of 5000 images on the Alamy website is expected to double to 10,000 by May 2007.

The images are available on www.alamy.com
